You're in Mexico, and you've just been invited to a killer party. The guy who invites you asks you to bring kaguams. You confidently say yes, certainly not a problem, while behind a smile you are furiously committing that word to memory to could watch it on the dictionary app as soon as you're around the corner. You probably should have just asked asked guy what he meant because minutes later you'll find out to your horror that you just promised to bring sea turtles to a party tonight. A what? That can't be what he actually meant, can he? Mexican party expressions, like most of our slang, can be somewhat confusing if you have studied a different dialect (or no dialect at all). So if you're heading to Mexico and love to have a good time, keep reading to make sure your partying doesn't leave you lost in translation. Learning slang invariably helps with learning Spanish No matter how advanced your Spanish level is, if it's textbook and classy Spanish, it doesn't always help you on the streets. You have to learn some local expressions, some idioms and definitely a lot of slang. People who know a lot of slang sound like natives, understand what's going on around them and feel less excluded when hanging out with the locals. Learning the language through music, blogging and novels are great ways to contextualize local expressions, although they may not always tell you what those expressions mean. In addition to the explanations in this blog, there is another place to learn slang authentically, and it's with FluentU on your computer, tablet or smartphone. FluentU takes real videos like music videos, movie trailers, news and inspirational conversations, and turns them into personalized language learning lessons. Mexican is just one of many Spanish dialects spoken in videos that you will see in entertaining clips such as Chespirito, Mexico's most beloved comedian, and Mexico's Next Top Model.... Real Spanish in Mexican Taxi and Coffee Break with Belinda, the pop princess of Mexico. You can also check out Mexican expressions and slang on the YouTube channel FluentU! For example, in the following video, you can learn some of the most popular Mexican utterances with animation. In addition, the video teacher breaks down expressions for meaning and grammatical information, as well as their origin in Mexican culture. With all these resources on the table, let's get this party started! How do people party in Mexico? Basically, as elsewhere in the world. Given how big the country is and how many people live there, we can't generalize the style of the party. Some people party up in the morning, while others just share a few beers. In any case, once people start drinking, the tongue loses all formality and the slang comes out stronger than at any other time. It is also quite common to hear Mexicans speak very quickly, which is becoming increasingly apparent at parties. For foreigners, this can lead to some uncomfortable situations. Trying to catch up with some high-speed conversations while juggling regional slang is hard work. If only you knew some of the main words of the party and the expressions ... Well, it's What I'm here for: to make your party time a little less complicated and more open for local fun. These expressions that you're going to learn can be heard all over the country, but they're definitely definitely common in Mexico City. And, of course, these phrases are intended to be used by Spanish students who are old enough to enjoy adult drinks responsibly. You can even take your new Mexican party expressions for a spin with Gritty Spanish. It's adults-only as well, and it's a funny introduction to Spanish slang and regional Mexican accents included! Where are the people of the party in Mexico?1. En UN bar (in bar);2. En un concierto (in concert) People either brincar (jump), bailar (dance) or bailar clap (mosh) at concerts. El slam (mosh) is an expression that comes from the English verb clap, because when people dance it, they clap against each other. This usually happens at punk, rock or ska3 concerts. Disco En una (at the disco)4. En un antro (in a nightclub) Disco and antro may not have the same origin, but now they are used the same way, as a dance venue. The word antro, which in Latin and Greek means cave, used to have a negative reference to a lair or landfill. People used to use the term to talk about shabby joints (antros de mala muerte), but now it is very common to say antro when it comes to club. You will hear, for example, Vamos al antro or Vamos de antro (Let's go clubs), or Ese antro es muy bueno (This club is very good).5 En una casa (in the house)6. En una cantina (in cantina) cantina in Mexico are a type of bar in which people go to drink and eat botany (snacks), play cards, dominoes or other board games. Decades ago, entry was banned for women. They even had signs in the door saying Prohibida la entrada a mujeres, perros y uniformados (entry to women, dogs and men in uniform, i.e. police officers or soldiers). Today in large cities or towns, women are allowed, but dogs and men in military uniforms are still not. In Mexico City, cantins take the nerd to a completely different level. After the second beer, you start getting different dishes with every beer you drink, and the food is always free. So, if you're in a cantina, and the waiter asks you, Cue le Sirvo (de comer)? (What (food) can I offer you?), don't be surprised! Just choose a dish and enjoy it because you only pay for the beer. Mexican expressions for party? Fiesta (party) in Mexico there are many ways to appeal to the party: fiesta (literally means party), parrand (without literal translation), peda (literally will be a female version of the fart) and cups (literally means wineglasses and cups, but it also means drinks). You'll hear quite often, for example: Dende es la fiesta / la parranda / la peda? (Where's the party?) Nos fuimos de fiesta / de parranda / de peda / de copas. (We went partying.) La fiesta / la parranda / la peda estuvo buenisim. (The party was very good.) 8. Irse de fiesta (goes to the party) Say that you go to the party can be said as irse de fiesta, irse de parranda, irse de peda or irse de You just need to conjugate the irse and add the word you choose to use for the party. So one of the Me voy de fiesta - I'm going to a party. I don't know what to do. Those you de fiesta - you're going to a party. (Ei/Ella) Se va de fiesta - He/she goes to a party. (Nosotros) Netros) Nos vamos de fiesta - We're going to a party. (Ustedes) Se van de Fiesta - You guys are going to a party. (Ello/Ellas) Se van de Fiesta - They're going to a party. These expressions have also evolved into verbs that create fiestaer, parrandear and copear, which are conjugated like ordinary verbs that end in -ar. (Yo fiestaer, t' fiestaes, ale/ella fiestaer, nosotros fiestaeamos, ustedes fiestaean, ellos/ellas fiestaean). La peda is usually a more vulgar expression, and even if widely used, you can be careful not to use it in a working or formal environment.9 Precopeo (pregaming) This word literally means pre-wineglassing or pre-cup, but translates as pre-consumption of alcohol, and is a common expression among some groups. Some people use this term to refer to warm-up drinking (pregaming) to a real party. So, suppose you're going to de antro (clubs) at 11pm, but you decide to invite your friends to your house at 9pm to warm up and start drinking before you go out. It's called precopeo. It doesn't really make sense since you already drink, but you can still hear some people say: Vamos las 11 al antro, pen puedes llegar mi casa a las 9 al precopeo (We go to the club at 11, but you can come to my house at 9 before the pre-match game). The specifics of drinks in Mexico10. Chupar / Pistear (drink)Chupar (literally lick or suck) and pistear both slang for a drink. El chupe and el pisto are nouns, so they refer to drinks. Chupar and chupe are used in the center and in southern Mexico, while pistear and pisto are more common in the north. There are many words that somehow refer to drinks. Here are some of the most common ones.11. Una copit (drink) Literally a little cup, una copita is used to refer to most of the drinks that you drink from a glass except beer. In Mexico people speak quite often in diminutive, but don't expect anything small when you hear this. If someone asks you, Kieres una copita?, they don't ask you if you want a glass of wine or a cup. They ask you if you want to drink something.12 Un trago (drink) Literally means sip, UN trago has the same value as una copa or una copita. So if someone asks you, Kieres un trago?, they don't ask you if you want a sip - they offer you a strong drink, such as whiskey or cognac.13 Un caballito (type of shot)Mezcal and tequila are usually served in a certain type of shot called caballito (literally: a small horse). So when someone asks you, Kieres un caballito?, chances are they offer you either tequila or mezcal. expressions for beer14. Chelal/Cheve (beer)Chela and cheve both words slang for beer, although cheve is used more in north Mexico.15. Kaguama (big bottle of beer)A kaguama is a large bottle of beer that 940 ml to one liter of beer, depending on the presentation. As we saw in the intro, kaguama is literally a loggerhead sea turtle-reptile that is usually reddish brown, which can measure up to 280 cm (110 inches) in length and that weight is about 135 kg (298 pounds). The family beer is named after the turtle because of its size and color. They probably thought it was inappropriate to call family beer a big beer.16 Cerveza de Barril (project beer)Cerveza de Barril is a draft beer that can be Clara (light) or obscurity / oscura (dark).17. Chelada/Michelada (Cubana) (different mixed beer) Helad is a beer mixed with lemon and salt, while Michelada also has spicy sauces. But when someone offers you one, you still have to ask what they mean, or how it is prepared. This is because in some places michelada is one prepared only with salt and lemon, while beer with spicy sauces michelada cubana (literally Cuban Michelada, although I doubt Cubans add chili to their beer).18 Un six (six packs) Un six (six) refers to a six-pack can of beer. So if someone tells you: Vamos comprar un six para la fiesta (Let's buy six for a lot), you know what you're going to buy.19. Una-frea (cold beer) Una-frea (literally cold) also refers to beer. You can even hear Kiero una f'ra bien f'ra (literally: I want a very cold cold) or Kiero una-freja bien muerta (literally: I want a very dead cold). In both cases, someone wants a very cold beer.20. Una cubeta (bucket) refers to a bucket full of beer bottles and ice to keep them cold. In some bars, if you order a bucket of beer it is usually cheaper than ordering the same amount of beer separately. So if you hear your friends in the bar asking each other, Pedimos una cubta? (Should we order a bucket?), expect to get a beer. If you celebrated too much in Mexico ... 21. Estar borracho/a (to be drunk)Estar borracho/a, estar pedo/a (literally being a fart), estar jarra (literally being a jar or jug), estar tomado/a (literally be taken) all expressions that imply being drunk.22 Ponerse una peda/jarra (to get drunk)Ponerse una peda (literally put on a fart) or ponerse una jarra (literally put on a jar or jug) means to get drunk. So, the day after the party, you can hear your friends say: Ayer estaba muy borracho/pedo/jarra/tomado or ayer me puse una peda/jarra, which you can translate as yesterday I was (or got) very drunk. 23. Estar crudo/a (to be a hangover) And if ever drinking so much that you're a hangover (which we don't totally recommend), you'd say estoy crudo/a, which literally means I'm raw, but that implies a hangover. Mexican expressions for when party over24. Conductor (a) designado (a) (designated driver)A conductor (a) (designated driver) is a person who did not drink during the party, who will drive everyone home. But since this man won't drink, it's very very to hear people call him/her conductor a retired driver.25 Aque se rompi' una taza (the party is over)And finally, if you ever hear the host of the party saying: Aque se rompi' una taza (Here was a broken cup), understand this as a subtle way to tell people that the party is over. This is the first part of a phrase that is almost never fully used because people understand what it means. The whole phrase aque se rompi' una taza y cada quien para su casa (Here the cup was broken and all in their homes). So you think you're ready for a party in Mexico? I think so!
